Country Wants Protection.

At the last presidential election a large majority of the voters of the United States supported protective platforms. The electoral division among Republicans left a loophole, for the moment, by means of which legis-lative authority rested with a minority of voters. But the vote for protection stands as the substantial fact, pointing unmistakably to the popular position on the subject. This support of protection has been interwoven with the history of the country for fifty years, and paramount in national policies for nearly all the time.

As every person of practical busi-ness judgment can see, the end of the war will flood the country with cheap foreign goods in ruinous competition protective safeguard is applied. All Europe will hold a rummage sale if our doors are flung wide open on the The best of us hunger, indeed,
